WONDERS OF SURGERY.—At a meeting of the San Francisco Medical Society last evening Dr. A. Andrel delivered a brief but very interesting lecture upon the resection of the bones of the body when disease necessitated the removal of a portion thereof. To illustrate this theory, Dr. Andrel called attention to the case of John Bollett, one of his patients, who was present.

Two years ago this man came to this city with his left arm in a terrible condition from white-swellings. The bones forming the elbow joint were found to be hopelessly diseased, and the doctor decided to remove them, and trust to the reproductive power of nature for their reformation. He accordingly cut out about two inches above and two inches below the elbow-joint, thus removing the joint entirely. In this operation the greatest care had to be exercised to guard against injuring any of the nerves or sinews.

The arm was then placed in a mechanical apparatus contrived to prevent a shrinkage of the muscles or derangement of position, and nature was left to do the rest. The thorough manner in which she performed her share was demonstrated satisfactorily last night by an examination of the patient. His left arm is apparently as strong and flexible as the right. The bones of the arm have not only grown together, but a new and healthy elbow-joint has formed.

Drs. Gibbons, Morse, Bently, and others expressed their professional appreciation of the wonderful nature of the operation, which Dr.
Morse declared might be classed among the triumphs of modern conservative surgery.

The old elbow-joint was exhibited, and attracted considerable interest. It belongs to Dr.
Andrel now by donation from Mr. Bollett who says he has no particular use for a third elbow joint.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A BATTLE FIELD.—Dr. Russell, the London Times correspondent, in his recently published diary, kept during the Franco-Prussian war, says that the day after Sedan he rode over the battle field, the grisly horrors of which passed all belief. Human hands hanging in the trees; a dead lancer gazing curiously at the head of a zouave, which lay in his lap, clean blown off; a wretch, towards the front under the weight of a sackful of watches and gold lace—these were some of the loathsome sights. Perhaps none of them were so bad as that of the body of a French peasant, seen one lovely morning, as the Crown Prince, on his way to Paris, led his staff out of Montmirail through a beautiful country. This poor victim of war, "dressed in a blouse, was lying off the road inside a gap.
He had been shot through the heart, and had fallen face forward. There would have been nothing to account for his death, but that an old musket, broken in two, lay near him, and that the band of his cap had a number, and that a strip of red cloth gave it some semblance of uniform."

JANET HAMILTON.—The Edinburgh Scotchman announces the death of Mrs. Janet Hamilton, the Coarbridge poetess, whom it describes as one of the most remarkable Scotch women of the present century. Janet Hamilton was the daughter of a working shoemaker, and, although without education, the mother of a large family—she married at 13—and for many years towards the close of her life totally blind, yet contrived, amid circumstances seemingly so adverse from first to last, not only to store her mind by self-culture, but to produce poems and various other writings of no ordinary merit.
About three months ago a number of Mrs.
Hamilton's admirers, among whom were Lord Dalhousie, Lord House, Sir W. Stirling-Maxwell and Sheriff Bell, proposed to raise £100 to present to Mrs. Hamilton, but her death has rendered fruitless the kind design, except in so far as it has shown how many and warm friends she possessed. The lady was in her 78th year.

A HEADQUARTERS OF LOVELINESS.—Beautiful women, the pure and the meretricious, come here from every part of the country. As in former times, philosophers repaired to the lyceums of Athens to display their acquirements, and as now no musical artist considers fame and fortune assured until the judgment of Paris be pronounced, so no woman in New York, Boston, or Philadelphia, or in the other cities in the West, can reign as either a beauty or a wit unless she has passed the ordeal of New Orleans. Hence the splendid array of loveliness we boast of. At this season of the year they come from every quarter—the voluptuous Andalusians, the enticing grise-to, the embonpoint of Holland, the sunny tint of Italy, the blue eye of Ireland, the red rose of England, the "hint white locks" of Scotia, our own seductive Americans—all warmed and mellowed by the sun of Louisiana.—N. O. Picayune.

SCHOOLS FOR GIRLS that Dickens would have loved to paint have been found by the Scholastic Register at Kensington, Finchley, Walthamstow, and Waltham Cross, near London. Spare the rod and spoil the child is no part of their discipline. Canes, leather straps, the classic birch are their common instruments of punishment. And what terrible wickedness requires such severity? Nothing less than the heinous offense of "nodding and kissing hands to gentlemen." This is the only way in which this propensity in the youthful maidens in the vicinity of famous London town can be restrained. And we are moreover assured that "Every father should be thankful to those governesses who have been the means of checking maiden improprieties, no matter at what cost." These girls thus "bitched," were young ladies of fifteen, seventeen and eighteen! The papers may well call upon parents to take their children away from such schools and place them elsewhere.

FASHION.—A Paris correspondent writing of the prevailing fashions, says that the latest style of opera cloaks are cut with sleeves. The trimming is entirely of gold or silver braid.
The head-covering is a simple scarf of silk tulle, carelessly thrown over the head, and carried around the throat, the long sweeping end falling gracefully over the left shoulder; a cluster of buds nestles in the soft folds at the right side, and another bunch of flowers holds together the ends of the scarf. This style of opera head-gear is becoming to almost every lady, and, although simple, it is remarkably attractive.
